

School Uniforms

Did you know that each year we spend around £950 million on the clothes we wear to school?¹

But some school uniforms may have been produced by children as young as 7, working 13 hours a day in bad conditions. Why?

Lots of school uniforms are made from cotton, and most cotton is grown in developing countries such as India or parts of Africa. Unfortunately, because the majority of the clothes we buy aren't made from Fairtrade cotton this causes lots of problems for the farmers and their children:

- ⇒ Farmers become ill because they use very dangerous pesticides on the crops².
- ⇒ The drinking water for the farmer's community can become polluted with the chemicals from the cotton
- ⇒ Children are taken out of school to work picking cotton, or do not get access to education at all because they are sewing our clothes.
- ⇒ Farmers aren't getting enough money and have to borrow in order to survive with very high interest rates which they then can't afford to pay back.

What can you do?

There are lots of ways that schools can become part of the solution to the problems outlined above. You could order Fairtrade school uniforms. You will find a list on the following pages of shops and websites that sell Fairtrade cotton uniforms.

You could use Fairtrade cotton for your P.E kits, or other activities for example you could get a personalised Fairtrade cotton tea towel printed with Bishopston Trading Company.

Mamouna Keita is a Fairtrade cotton farmer in Mali

You could write to school uniform shops to let them know that you would like them to sell Fairtrade school uniforms. The great news is that this really works! Tesco have just announced that they are going to double their range of Fairtrade school uniform and this is all because of pressure from schools in the People & Planet 'wear fair' campaign.
